Why do I have to study this? There are several reasons why you would want to take this course.. (Note: Some colleges like the idea to just give you a score and you can review all questions at the end. Those are fine for students in general.). What is an Entry Level Entry Level Entry Level 1 and 2 student? To be an entry level student in this college or university, you need to possess the basic level requirements in the undergraduate major that you have applied for. The minimum requirements for the courses you must pass are: Basic math A minimum of 36 credits or 756 credits B minimum of 14 credits of coursework in one of the following courses. (Note that all the credits must be in math or one of the courses in each of the specified courses or both.) The minimum requirements required for advanced coursework are: Introductory math with specific emphasis to problems in advanced algebra, geometry, probability, and discrete mathematics B minimum of 15 credits of coursework. C credit in math, which may include pre-college introductory courses. Some of the courses covered by pre-college introduction courses, but not all, may be electives or courses of study that are not included in your major. Some may be electives from a different college and some may be courses that may not count toward a GPA. If you do not know what course you are taking then you must seek guidance from the admissions staff. See below. Your GPA will depend upon your final grade point average, your major, and your test scores.. After answering each question, the class decides whether the answers match your score or not.
